The Daily Press

HONGKONG, APRIL 17TH, 1876.

The last advice received concerning the murder of Mr. MARGARY did not throw much additional light upon that melancholy tragedy. It seems that, confident and unsuspecting, he had gone on in advance of Colonel Browne, with only his Chinese followers, the result being that he fell into a snare laid for him, and was ruthlessly murdered. Colonel Browne would have inevitably shared the same fate, but for the valour of his escort of Sikhs, who fought manfully and repulsed their assailants with a loss, it is stated, of seventy killed, without losing a man themselves. The gallant Colonel, in a letter received at Rangoon, describes the assault on his party as having begun by the Chinese with great fury, but they were soon frightened at the rapidity of the firing of the Sikhs with their Sniders, and would not leave the cover of the jungle. The skirmishing lasted from about eight in the morning to four in the afternoon, when a Kachin tribe fired the jungle and helped Colonel Browne to retreat. The greater portion of the baggage was lost, but hopes are entertained of its recovery through this same tribe. The Burmese, as well as the Sikhs, belonging to the escort, fought faithfully, although urged by the enemy to desert. Mr. Ellis was ordered back as soon as intelligence of the disaster was received, and returned to Bhamo at once, or he would of a certainty fallen a victim to the fury of the people of Momein. Such are all the details at present known of this sad and unexpected termination to the Burmese-Chinese Expedition.

What remains now for the British Government to demand and obtain satisfaction for this unprovoked and cruel murder, and of blood and crime and police regrets. Moreover, the authorities must insist upon full guarantees for the future, so that it may be possible hereafter for British subjects to travel without danger or molestation through the Chinese Empire. It is not impossible, though we are loath to accuse the Imperial Government of China of connivance in such a base and treacherous act, that the attack was instigated by some provincial official on purpose to defeat the object of the expedition and prove that it would be dangerous to attempt to open up a route through a country so hostile to foreigners. The policy of the Chinese is to throw cold water upon every attempt to open up any part of that Empire, and hence it may safely be concluded that they looked upon the object of the Burmese-Chinese Expedition with ill-disguised disfavour. It is true the Government of Peking granted passports to the party, and thus rendered themselves answerable for the safety of the explorers; but they could scarcely do otherwise, and no importance, therefore, attaches to the circumstance, nor does it in any degree relieve them from suspicion. That can only be done by their unhesitatingly making the amende honorable, that is, giving the most entire satisfaction and compensation in their power for the outrage committed by their fanatical subjects at Momein. But it is sadly to be feared that we cannot trust either the Chinese Government or people further than we can control or be cognisant of their actions. As a tolerably forcible proof of the unfriendly spirit which animates them, we may mention that a communication was recently addressed to a local Chinese newspaper by an intelligent Chinaman, in which he suggested that if there were any difficulty in adjusting the dispute likely to arise out of the murder of Mr. MARGARY, the Government of Peking should enter into an alliance with Russia for the purpose of attacking India, where, he stated, British rule was very unpopular. The suggestion of this bellicose son of Han serves to point a moral as well as to adorn a tale. It shows that, as far as many of the Chinese are concerned, we are not likely to gain much satisfaction beyond what is extorted from their fears. To their fears, therefore, if their sense of justice fails to concede it, we must appeal.

England cannot afford to allow any more outrages on her subjects to pass unpunished. They have been far too frequent of late. In Guatemala, Mr. MARGARY, the British Vice-Consul at San José, was, twelve months ago, subjected to a vile indignity. By order of Commandant GONZALEZ, he was stripped and received 210 lashes, administered by soldiers. For this during outrage the Government of Guatemala has been compelled to make the British flag at San José with twenty-one guns and to pay an indemnity of $10,000. The Spanish Government, with yet greater audacity, nine of them men of colour, the remainder white men, the crew of the Virgen, which outrage will be well remembered. They have also been compelled to make compensation, to the tune of $7,700 sterling, to be paid to the relatives of the unfortunate men. But this was a very inadequate compensation, and will not, it is to be feared, deter them on another occasion. The life of a British subject is surely more than £500, the maximum sum fixed for one of the slaughtered crew. This will prove a poor solatium to a sorrowing widow with half a dozen children bereft of their breadwinner. In their extreme tenderness for the rights, feelings, and prejudices of foreigners, the British Government have further agreed, to refund any portion of the indemnity not satisfied by relatives of the murdered man. Surely this is being a trifle too particular over such a pitiful amount. In the same mistaken spirit Mr. Munro's appeal for Government assistance in prosecuting his claim upon the Chinese Government was disregarded, though he had a good right to expect that the Foreign Office would have loaned to him no unreasonable petition. We hope that we shall not have to witness a miserable and feeble temporising in the case of the massacre at Momein, and are encouraged to hope otherwise from the action taken in the case of the murder of Lieutenant HORTON and the other members of the survey party by the Nagas. An expedition has been fitted out and sent to punish the offenders, and may perhaps on this have succeeded in its mission. Unless outrages on the subjects of our MAJESTY are promptly avenged, the prestige and influence of Great Britain must decline, and its people will no longer care to boast of the inviolable protection which has long in former days surely afforded.

In the Supreme Court yesterday, before the Chief-Justice and Mr. Justice Snowden, Mr. Wong Ahung and another were charged with the murder of Mr. MARGARY, and the murder of Mr. MARGARY, and the murder of Mr. MARGARY.
